interim measures in respect of the Commission Decision of 3 July 2001 relating to a proceeding pursuant to Article 82 EC (Case COMP D3/38.044 — NDC Health/IMS Health: Interim measures), for the provisional suspension of the operation of that decision,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

makes the following

Order

- IMS Health Incorporated (hereinafter the 'applicant') is a market research company that provides a broad range of market research, marketing, and sales management services to the pharmaceutical industry. In particular, it provides, through its German subsidiary, regional wholesaler data report services to interested pharmaceutical companies in respect of sales of pharmaceutical products by pharmacies throughout Germany. The services are based on a 'brick structure'. Brick structures divide a country into artificially designated geographic areas or 'bricks' that are used to report and measure sales of individual pharmaceutical products.
- Since 1969 the applicant has invested considerable resources in developing its German brick-structure-based information services. These efforts culminated in the development of the 1 860 brick structure format (the '1860 brick structure'), which was launched in January 2000. The 1860 brick structure now constitutes the central feature of the applicant's German regional wholesaler data-information service.

Suspecting that two competitors on the German market, Pharma Intranet Information AG ('PI') and AzyX Deutschland GmbH ('AzyX'), which were founded by former senior personnel from IMS Health and which had initially entered the German market selling services based on alternative brick structures, were, by early 2000, in fact selling services based on copies of the 1 860 brick structure, the applicant commenced, on 26 May 2000, copyright infringement proceedings before the Landgericht (Regional Court) Frankfurt am Main. On 16 November 2000, the Landgericht Frankfurt, confirming an earlier judgment of 12 October 2000, held that, under German copyright law, the applicant enjoyed copyright in the 1 860 brick structure. In the same judgment, it also confirmed an injunction it had issued on 27 October 2000 prohibiting PI from using brick structures derived from the applicant's 1 860 brick structure.

On 26 October 2000, National Data Corporation (hereinafter 'NDC'), also a United States company, which had acquired PI in August 2000, requested a licence from the applicant to use the 1 860 brick structure in return for an annual licence fee of DEM 10 000 (EUR 5 112.92). By letter of 28 November 2000, the applicant rejected the request while the copyright issue remained sub judice before the national courts, PI having lodged an appeal against the Landgericht Frankfurt's judgment of 16 November 2000. In a further letter of 18 December 2000, the applicant refused to enter into negotiations arguing that it was not essential for NDC to have the use of the 1 860 brick structure to compete against it on the German market.

On 18 December 2000, NDC lodged a complaint with the Commission alleging that the applicant's refusal to licence the 1 860 brick structure to it constituted an infringement of Article 82 EC.

On 8 March 2001, the Commission sent a Statement of Objections ('SO') to the applicant which was received on 9 March 2001. The Commission alleged, having regard in particular to Bronner (Case C-7/97 [1998] ECR I-7791), that access to the 1 860 brick structure amounted to an essential facility (SO, paragraph 84) for competitors of the applicant such as NDC. Accordingly, the applicant's refusal to allow access thereto potentially constituted a prima facie abuse of the dominant position which, in the Commission's view, it held on the relevant German market as a result of the 1 860 brick structure. The Commission warned the applicant that it intended to adopt a decision imposing interim measures (SO, paragraphs 100 to 103).

The applicant submitted a written response to the SO on 2 April 2001. An oral hearing then took place on 6 April 2001. The Commission sent a request for further information to the applicant on 4 May 2001, to which the latter replied on 14 May 2001. The applicant also replied, on 14 June 2001, to further evidence obtained by the Commission following requests made by it of a number of pharmaceutical companies, copies of which were provided by the Commission to the applicant in two instalments on 22 May and 6 June 2001 respectively.

On 19 June 2001, PI's appeal against the judgments of 27 October and 16 November 2000 was dismissed by the Oberlandesgericht (Higher Regional Court) Frankfurt am Main.

On 3 July 2001, the Commission adopted a decision relating to a proceeding pursuant to Article 82 EC (Case COMP D3/38.044 — NDC Health/IMS Health: Interim measures) (hereinafter the 'contested decision'). The decision is based on Council Regulation No 17 of 6 February, first Regulation implementing Articles [81] and [82] of the Treaty, as amended (OJ, English Special Edition 1959-1962, p. 87), and in particular on the Commission's powers under Articles 3 and 16 thereof as interpreted by the Community judicature in the Camera Care line of case-law (see, inter alia, Case 792/79 R Camera Care v Commission [1980] ECR 119, Joined Cases 228/82 and 229/82 Ford v Commission [1984] ECR 1129 and Case T-44/90 La Cinq v Commission [1992] ECR II-1).

In the contested decision, the Commission considers (paragraph 41) that, according to the Camera Care line of case-law, three conditions must be satisfied before it may take protective measures in the course of a competition investigation:
'— there is a reasonably strong prima facie case establishing an infringement;
 there is a likelihood of serious and irreparable harm to the applicants unless the measures are ordered;
— there is an urgent need for protective measures'.
The Commission finds in the contested decision that these conditions are satisfied in the present case. The applicant's 'refusal of access to the 1.860 brick structure

The Commission finds in the contested decision that these conditions are satisfied in the present case. The applicant's 'refusal of access to the 1 860 brick structure is likely to eliminate all competition in the relevant market, since without it it is not possible to compete on the relevant market' (paragraph 181). This finding is based on its conclusion that the said structure constitutes a 'de facto industry standard' (paragraph 180). It also considers, on the basis of the evidence before it, that 'there is good reason to suppose that unless NDC is granted a licence to the 1 860 brick structure its German operation will go out of business, and that there will be intolerable damage to the public interest' (paragraph 190). The latter assessment is based primarily on its concern 'for the continued presence of the [applicant's] other current competitor, AzyX, on the market' (paragraph 195).

12 The dispositive part of the contested decision provides:

'Article 1

IMS Health (IMS) is hereby required to grant a licence without delay to all undertakings currently present on the market for German regional sales data services, on request and on a non-discriminatory basis, for the use of 1 860 brick structure, in order to permit the use of and sales by such undertakings of regional sales data formatted according to this structure.

Article 2

In any licensing agreements relating to the 1 860 brick structure, any royalties to be paid for these licences shall be determined by agreement between IMS and the undertaking requesting the licence ("the parties").

If an agreement has not been reached within two weeks of the date of the request for a licence, appropriate royalties will be determined by one or several independent experts. The expert(s) will be chosen by agreement of the parties within one week of the parties' failure to agree on a licence fee. If an agreement on the identity of the expert(s) has not been reached within this time, the Commission shall appoint an expert or several experts from a list of candidates provided by the parties, or, if appropriate, choose one or several suitably qualified person(s).

The parties will make available to the expert(s) any document which the expert(s) consider necessary or useful to carry out their task. The expert(s) shall be bound by professional secrecy and shall not disclose any evidence or documents to third parties except to the Commission.

The expert(s) will make a determination on the basis of transparent and objective criteria, within two weeks of being chosen to carry out this task. The expert(s) will communicate this determination without delay to the Commission for approval. The Commission's Decision shall be final and take effect immediately.

Article 3

A penalty of EUR 1 000 per day shall be payable in respect of any period during which IMS fails to comply with the provisions of this Decision.

Article 4

The	provisions	of this	Decision	shall	apply	until	notification	of the	decision conc	luding the	proceed	ling.

Article 5

This Decision is addressed to IMS Health of Harewood Avenue, London NW1, United Kingdom.'

- By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 6 August 2001, the applicant brought an action under the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC seeking, inter alia, the annulment of the contested decision or, alternatively, its annulment 'insofar as it requires IMS Health to licence the 1 860 [b]rick [s]tructure to companies currently present on the German market for regional sales data services and specifies the conditions under which the negotiation of licence terms will be conducted and approved by the Commission'.
- By separate application lodged at the Court's Registry on the same day, the applicant, in accordance with Articles 242 and 243 EC, brought the present application for interim measures in respect of the operation of the contested decision. It requests the President of the Court of First Instance to order the following interlocutory relief:
 - '— To suspend the operation of the Decision on his own initiative until such time as he has heard and determined this Application;

II - 2358

— To further suspend the operation of the Decision until the Court of First Instance has rendered judgment on the [the main action]; and
— To grant any other interim measures the President considers appropriate.'
In respect of the first measure of interim sought from the judge hearing the application for interim measures, the applicant submits that it is extremely urgent that the operation of the contested decision be suspended until an order is made terminating the proceedings for interim relief. It points out that, in accordance with Article 2 of the contested decision, a decision by the Commission that would be 'final and take effect immediately' could be taken even before the end of August 2001. It is clear from paragraph 6 of the present application that this particular claim for interim relief is based on Article 105(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance (hereinafter 'the Rules').
In support of the claim, the applicant's core submission is that the contested decision contradicts settled Community case-law, as well as previous Commission decisions, by finding that it is prima facie unlawful for a dominant undertaking, such as the applicant, to refuse to share with competitors a competitive advantage in the form of its intellectual property in the 1 860 brick structure in respect of the very market to which that intellectual property relates. The finding of the Commission deprives it of the very essence of its copyright under national law as recognised by Community law and is manifestly incompatible with Article 295 EC. It will thereby cause the applicant to incur immediate, serious, enduring and potentially irreparable damage, in particular by materially and permanently devaluing its brick-structure-based and copyright-protected data-information services to a generic 'commodity' service indistinct from the services offered by its competitors.

As regards the Commission's view that the existence of a prima facie abuse by the applicant of its dominant position may be justified by reference to its finding that the 1 860 brick structure amounts to an industry standard and, hence, an essential facility for competitors such as the complainant NDC, the applicant contends that this constitutes a new legal objection which was not mentioned by the Commission in the SO and in respect of which it was not given an adequate opportunity to be heard prior to the adoption of the contested decision.

Concerning the balance of interests, the applicant alleges that it favours suspension of the decision because the interim measures ordered by the Commission in the contested decision are not 'conservatoire' (protective) in nature. Instead of preserving the status quo and, thus, ensuring the effectiveness of the final decision to be given in the main action, they alter the status quo by forcing the applicant to negotiate licence terms with NDC and AzyX where those undertakings previously not only had no licence but were, as found by the German courts, actually infringing its copyright in the 1 860 brick structure. Moreover, since the contested decision accepts that those undertakings are already active on the German market and have developed their own brick structures, there is no interim need to grant them a licence to use the 1 860 brick structure so as permit them to offer interested pharmaceutical companies the same services as the applicant is currently providing.

9 Pursuant to the second subparagraph of Article 105(2) of the Rules, the President of the Court of First Instance may grant an application for interim relief even before the observations of the opposite party have been submitted. Any such order may later be varied or cancelled either on application by a party to the application for interim measures or by the President of his own motion.

It is settled case-law that Article 105(2) of the Rules permits the judge hearing an 20 application for interim measures, either where it is necessary to enable him to have enough time to be sufficiently informed so as to be in a position to judge a complex factual and/or legal situation raised by the application before him, or where it is desirable in the interests of the proper administration of justice that the status quo be maintained pending a decision on the application, to adopt provisional interim measures (Case 221/86 R Group of the European Right v European Parliament [1986] ECR 2579, paragraph 9, Case 194/88 R Commission v Italy [1988] ECR 4547, paragraph 3, Case C-195/90 R Commission v Germany [1990] ECR 2715, paragraph 20, Case T-12/93 CCE Vittel et CE Pierval v Commission [1993] ECR II-449, paragraph 33). The scope of the power granted by that provision does not necessarily fall to be interpreted differently where the decision in respect of which provisional interim relief is sought is one in which interim measures have been adopted by the Commission pending the termination of an investigation under Regulation No 17 concerning an alleged infringement of Community competition law (Case 229/82 R Ford v Commission [1982] ECR 2849, paragraphs 7 and 8).

In the present case, it is first appropriate to recall that Article 295 EC provides that 'This Treaty shall in no way prejudice the rules in the Member States governing the system of property ownership'. It follows from Article 295 EC that a judge hearing an application for interim measures should normally treat with circumspection a Commission decision imposing, by way of interim measures taken in the course of a pending investigation under Article 3 of Regulation No 17, an obligation upon the proprietor of an intellectual property right recognised and protected by national law to licence the use of that property right.

It would appear from the contested decision that the Commission has based the contested decision particularly on its interpretation of the scope of the principles set out by the Court of Justice in Magill (Joined Cases C-241/91 P and C-242/91 P RTE and ITP v Commission [1995] ECR I-743). In that case, the Court of Justice, having rejected the contention that the exercise of a national copyright '[could] never be reviewed in relation to Article [82] of the Treaty' confirmed that 'a refusal to grant a licence, even if it is the act of an undertaking holding a dominant position, [could] not in itself constitute abuse of a dominant position' (paragraphs 48 and 49). It then acknowledged that 'the exercise of an exclusive right by the proprietor may, in exceptional circumstances, involve abusive conduct' (point 50).

On the question of whether such 'exceptional circumstances' existed in that case, the Court of Justice, on the basis of the findings of fact of the Court of First Instance regarding the existence of a distinct market for the provision of comprehensive weekly television guides separate from that for the separate weekly guides already produced, inter alia, by each of the appellants (paragraph 52), held as follows (paragraphs 53 to 57):

'Thus the appellants — who were, by force of circumstance, the only sources of the basic information on programme scheduling which is the indispensable raw material for compiling a weekly television guide — gave viewers wishing to obtain information on the choice of programmes for the week ahead no choice but to buy the weekly guides for each station and draw from each of them the information they needed to make comparisons.

The appellants' refusal to provide basic information by relying on national copyright provisions thus prevented the appearance of a new product, a comprehensive weekly guide to television programmes, which the appellants did not offer and for which there was a potential consumer demand. Such refusal constitutes an abuse under heading (b) of the second paragraph of Article [82] of the Treaty.

Second,	there	was	no	justif	ficatio	on	for	such	refusal	either	in	the	activity	of televisio	n broa	dcast	ing	or in	that	of	publ	lishing	g televisi	on ma	gaz	ines.

Third, and finally, as the Court of First Instance also held, the appellants, by their conduct, reserved to themselves the secondary market of weekly television guides by excluding all competition on that market... since they denied access to the basic information which is the raw material indispensable for the compilation of such a guide.

In the light of all those circumstances, the Court of First Instance did not err in law in holding that the appellants' conduct was an abuse of a dominant position within the meaning of Article [82] of the Treaty.'

It is clear from the reasoning of the Court of Justice in Magill that there are a number of potentially important differences between the circumstances of that case and those underlying the present case as set out in the contested decision. Yet the approach of the Commission underlying the contested decision would provisionally appear, in large measure, to depend upon the extent of the notion of 'exceptional circumstances' to which the Court of Justice refers in that case. It would also appear from an interim assessment of both the contested decision and the present application that the applicant has made out a provisional prima facie case that the Commission has misconstrued the scope of the principles set out in Magill by finding that, notwithstanding the differences between that case and the present case, the applicant's refusal to grant a copyright licence to NDC, among others, so that the latter could provide essentially the same information services, based in large part on freely available data, on the same market and to the same potential consumers as the services currently provided by the former amounts to a prima facie abuse of its dominant position. Even if the Commission were correctly to have found that the potential incompatibility of the impugned refusal of the applicant to licence the use of its copyright with the objectives of Article 82 EC could not be excluded merely because of the abovementioned factual differences, the correctness of the conclusion it draws from Magill in the final sentence of paragraph 67 of the contested decision cannot, for the purposes of justifying the far-reaching interim measures adopted in the contested decision, be, even temporally, confirmed.

At first sight, it would appear that the applicant also has made out a not unconvincing case that the interim measures adopted by the Commission in the contested decision exceed the scope of the Commission's powers to adopt interim measures on the basis of the Camera Care case-law. Far from preserving the status quo ante where NDC and AzyX were, as found by the national courts, providing a service based on an infringement of the applicant's copyright, the applicant is required by the contested decision to licence those undertakings so that, pending the final decision to be adopted by the Commission upon completion of its investigation of NDC's complaint, they are to be permitted legally to exploit that copyright. The contention of the Commission in the contested decision, made in respect of the similar argument advanced by the applicant in its observations on the SO, that the interim measures adopted therein 'merely maintain NDC's ability to compete on the market, and are no more than what is required in this situation to prevent intolerable damage to the public interest' (paragraph 217 of the contested decision) would not seem, at least on an initial assessment, to address the argument made by the applicant that they legitimise conduct that was previously illegitimate and are thus inappropriate as interim measures.

Furthermore, the applicant seems, at least provisionally, to have a prima facie case against the Commission's findings that the 1 860 brick structure has become an industry standard based on the fact that much, if not all, of the evidence upon which that finding is based in the contested decision was obtained only after the applicant had submitted its written and oral replies in respect of the SO. It could therefore be the case that the applicant was not afforded an adequate opportunity to rebut that evidence before the adoption of the contested decision.

In these circumstances, it is clear that the judge hearing the application for interim measures needs time, in accordance with the case-law cited in paragraph 20 above, to consider the complex factual and legal issues raised by the present application. Having regard in particular to the potentially very important economic consequences for the applicant of a decision of the Commission to fix the terms for a compulsory licence of its copyright in the 1 860 brick structure and to the serious encroachment on its property rights which any such decision would constitute, the proper administration of justice justifies, at this stage, a temporary suspension of the operation of the contested decision.

Accordingly, without waiting for the observations of the Commission, the deadline for whose submission has been fixed, following a request from it for a delay, for 12 September 2001, and without prejudice to the final decision to be made in the course of the present proceedings, it is necessary to order, as a protective measure in the interest of the proper administration of justice until that decision is given, the suspension of the operation of the contested decision.

As the order terminating an application for interim relief must be made speedily, this interim protective measure is not such as to cause irreparable harm either to the Commission's interest, or to that of the applicant's competitors, and particularly NDC, in the application of the interim measures adopted in the contested decision.

On those grounds,

	THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE
here	eby orders:
1.	The operation of the Commission Decision of 3 July 2001 relating to a proceeding pursuant to Article 82 EC (Case COMP D3/38.044 — NDC Health/IMS Health: Interim measures) is suspended until the order terminating the present proceedings for interim relief is made.
2.	Costs are reserved.
